WOMEN WHO WANT ABORTIONS FOUND TO BE WITCHES WHO SURVIVED SALEM

BIRMINGHAM, AL -- Many people have been struggling to understand the reasons behind the recent Alabama Abortion Ban. Democrats have accused Republicans of “weaponizing” abortion as a drastic measure for the upcoming 2020 election cycle. Alabama governor Kay Ivey has come under massive amounts of scrutiny after signing the ban and her tweet stating “that every life is a sacred gift from God” despite that whole “separation of church and state” thing but fuck that, right?

However, governor Ivey has come back with a more in-depth reasoning behind the ban. In a recent press conference, Ivey stated: “The Alabama Human Life Protection Act is an extra measure in the 400-year-long battle against Witchcraft. Recent scientific discoveries have found that all those women they drowned have actually been hibernating at the bottoms of lakes and ponds all these years, plotting their revenge. It’s been proven that abortion is a plot by witches to overthrow human kind and that [the act] is there to weed out those wretched Roald Dahl characters.”

TRUMP ADMITS HE'S BEEN SMOKING CRACK "FOR, LIKE, A REALLY LONG TIME"

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- Last Saturday, at a White House conference, President Trump told a sea of reporters that the reasoning behind his outbreaks, inappropriate tweets, and years of out-of-line comments is that he's been smoking crack "for, like, a really long time." When pressed with questions regarding his crack usage, Trump had this to say:

"Crack is awesome. It makes my pee pee tingle and God knows that everything I've ever done has been motivated by penile sensations. Sexual assault? Penis. Outbursts? Embarrassment of my tiny schlong. Running for president? I hoped the power would convince Melania to touch it on her own and not by having my butler drag her across the room by her wrists. And you know what? I'm done with the tiny hand jokes. When I hold my dick, my little hands make it look bigger and I'm okay with that and when you're high on crack, things look cooler and my hands look fucking massive."

19-YEAR-OLD CREEP CURES DEPRESSION

PORTLAND, OR -- On Tuesday afternoon, 18-year-old Carmen Jones took to her Twitter and her forty-thousand followers to talk about her ongoing struggle with depression and anxiety. This discussion was expressed through a twenty-tweet-long thread where she talked about the years of abuse she has experienced from her family and partners. In the thread, Jones talked about her experiences in therapy and hospitals and the many different medicines she's been prescribed over the years, among other things. Luckily for her, about ten tweets in, a young man with the username @fuckbitchesgetmoney420 came to her emotional rescue with this artistry of a tweet:

Who would've guessed that just five illiterate words would cure years of self-hatred and doubt?

We reached out to resident Psychologist, Dr. Karlie Webber, to get her take on this revolutionary stance of the most common mental illness. She stated that "if we had known that it was this easy, we could have prevented over 47,000 suicides in the last year alone. I never would've guessed that all it took was a lot of stupidity and the reduction of women to just their bodies."
